

Gauging the suitability, likelihood, and safety of Georgia's potential affiliation within the European Union, given that:

1. Georgia is not in Europe, but in Asia
2. Turkey has been denied affiliation
3. The nearest E.U. affiliate is 1,200 km away, by sea or by air

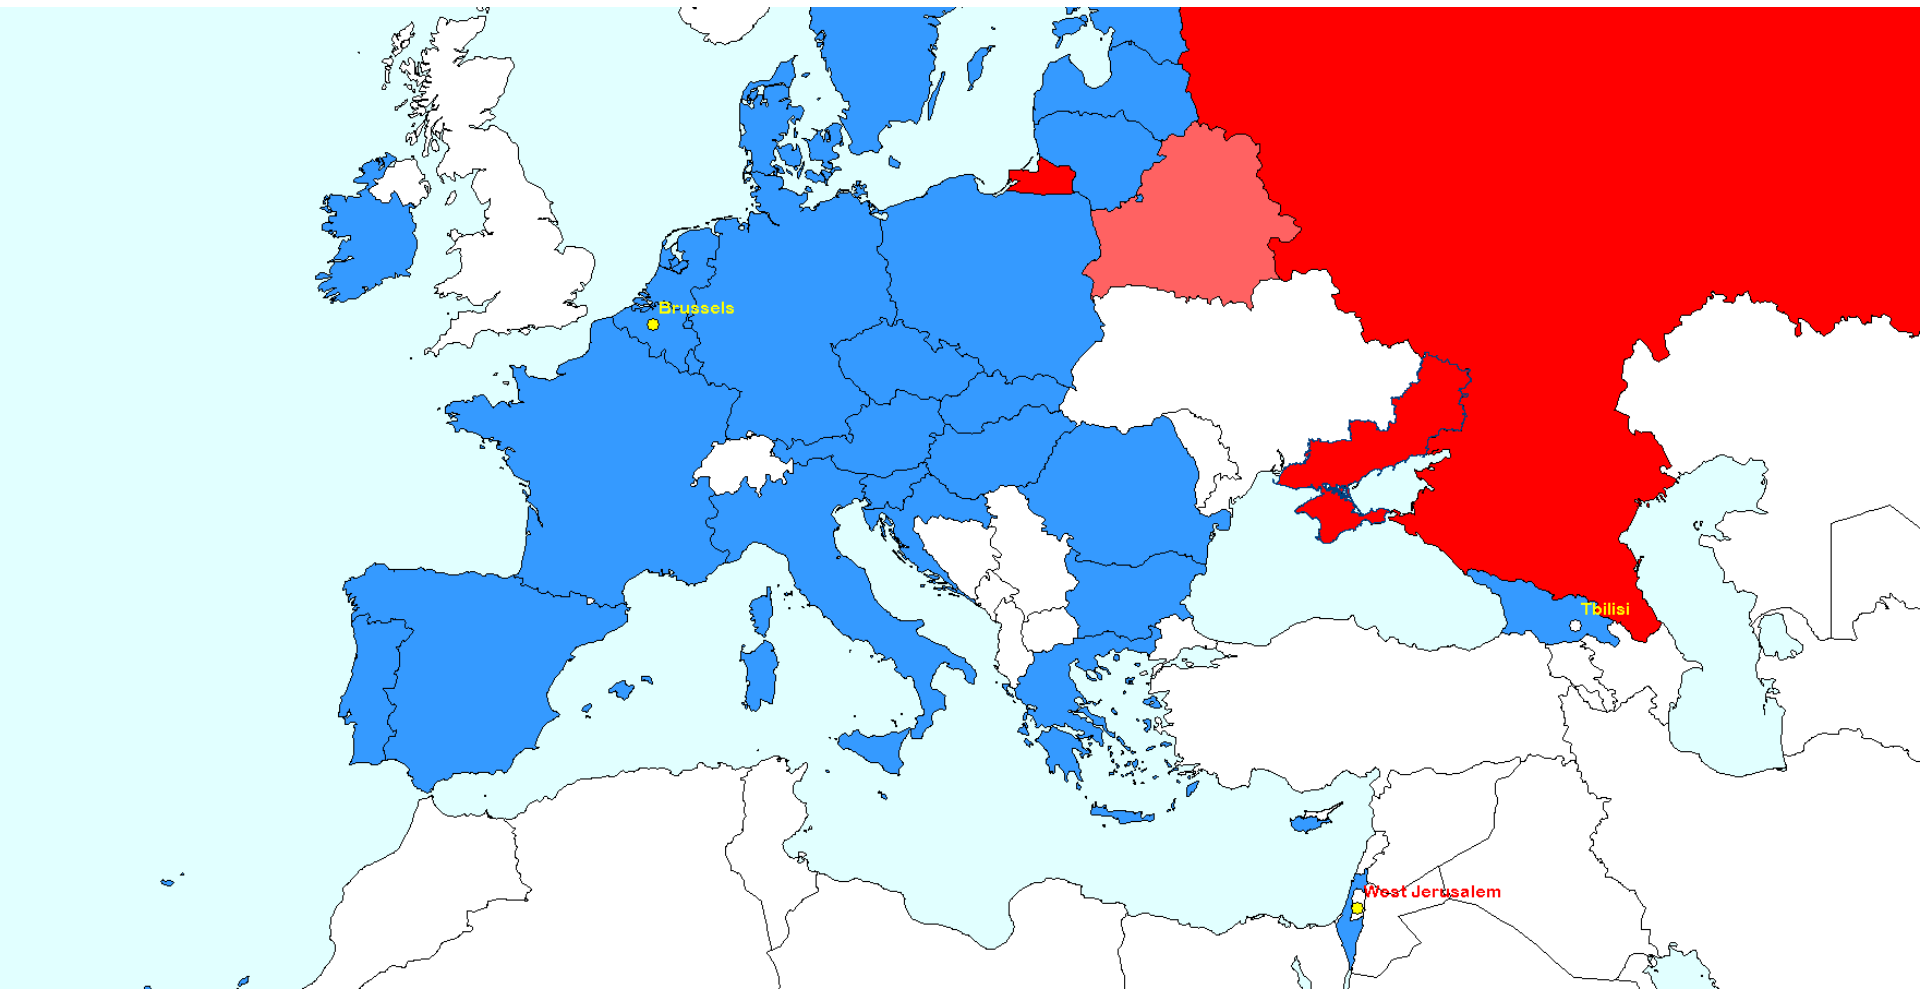

A Sense of Unity and Territorial Integrity: Georgia as a member of the European Union bloc

Would the new affiliation entice in the impartial observer:

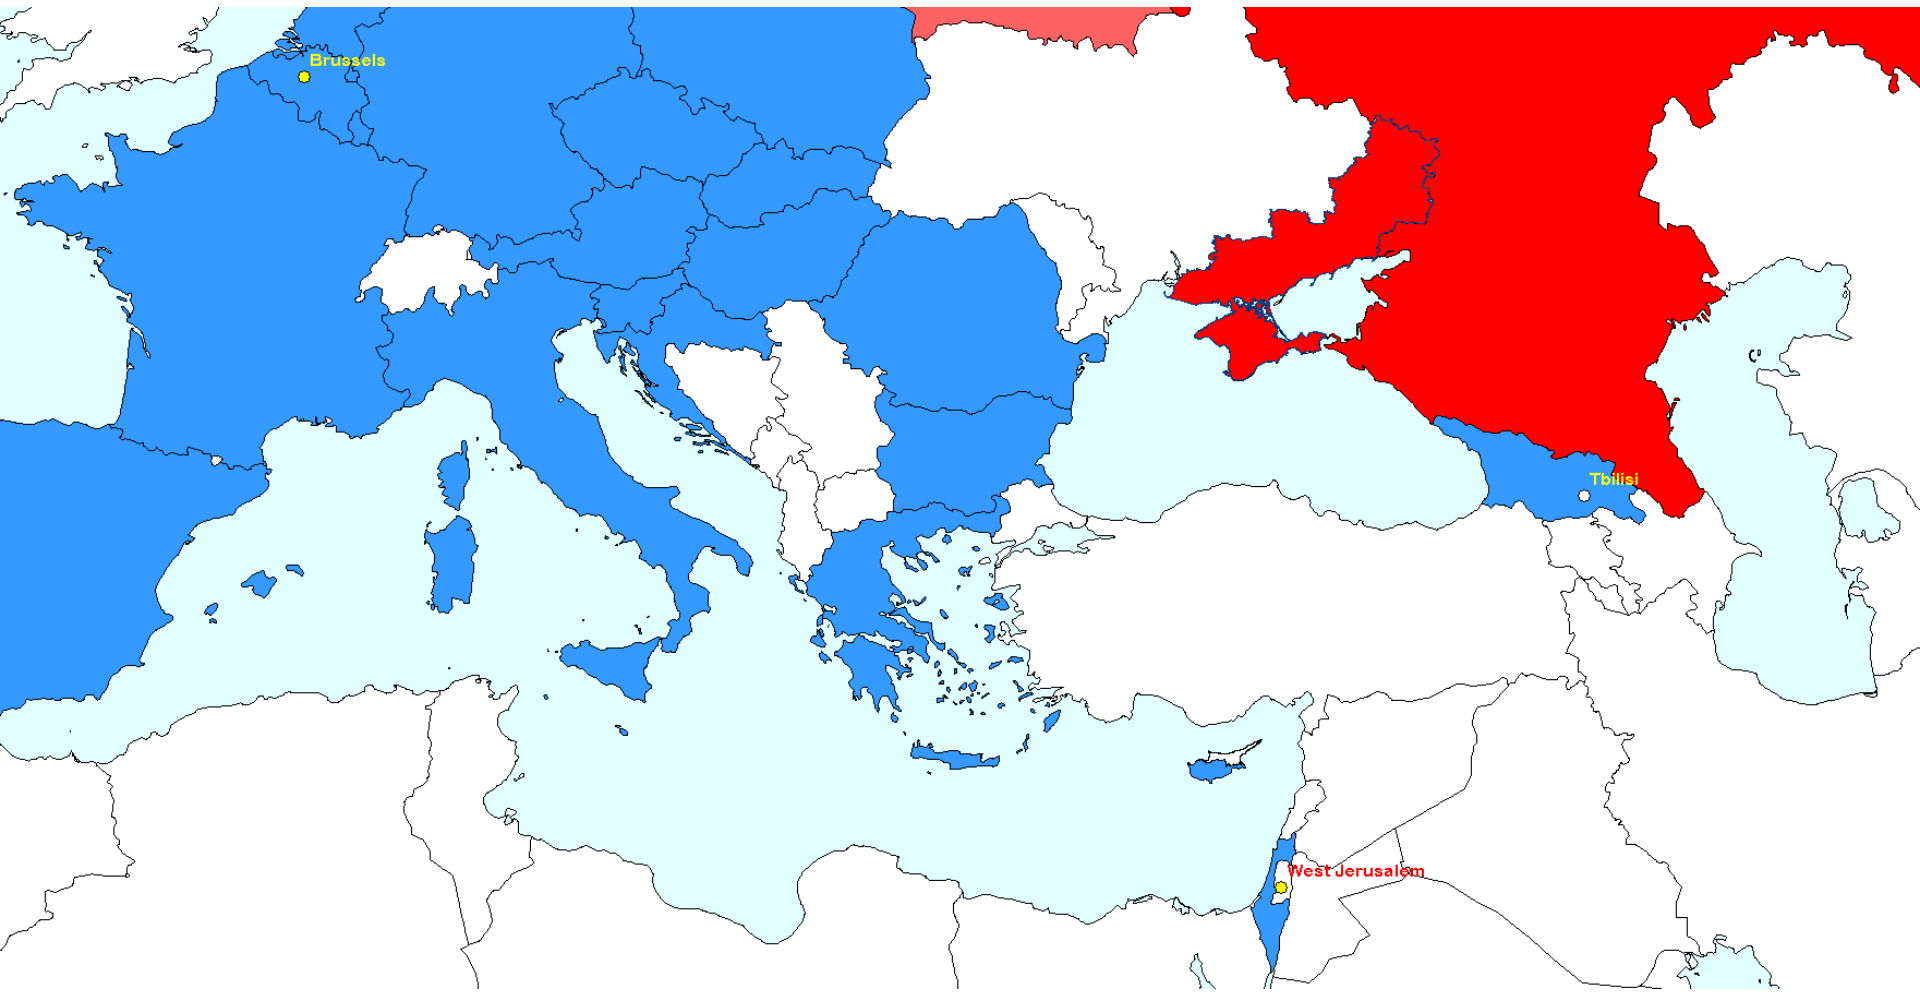

- 1. A sense of geopolitical comfort and stability, or
- 2. A sense of geopolitical discomfort and instability?

Although also in Asia, Israel becomes a member of the European Union as a logical consequence of the affiliation of Georgia

1. Geopolitically, Israel is significantly closer to the West than is Georgia
2. West Jerusalem is nearer Brussels than is Tbilisi
3. Israel is significantly nearer the blue bloc than is Georgia

Geographic and demographic characters would make Israel a contender probably as legitimate as Georgia, if not more

However, would the affiliation of Israel entice in the impartial observer:

1. A sense of geopolitical comfort and stability, or
2. A sense of geopolitical discomfort and instability?
