

Künstliche Intelligenz¹

(April 2024)

A. Lexicology

1. European languages other than English use the foreign English word "leader" to refer to those who deem themselves to be shrewd enough, some of them barely out of high school, to impose their views on the populations;
2. The reason for their using a foreign word instead of one of their own is quite obscure, except of course if they ignore the meaning of the term;
3. Since German is the language of philosophy, it is hereby suggested to substitute one foreign word for another and use instead the exact German translation, which is "Führer"².

B. Katastrophal Arroganz

1. The Führer(s) of the world seem intent to destroy us for reasons that have apparently not much to do with tolerance and brotherly love;
2. The insistence with which the Führer(s) of the world appear to force us towards a series of general murderous conflicts could suggest that they fell prey to either:
 - a. Boredom, or
 - b. A lack of elementary natural intelligence, or
 - c. Both

C. A proposed substitute for the Führer concept of Government

1. It is hereby proposed to substitute for the obvious lack of *Natürliche Intelligenz*³ in our Führer(s) the novel concept of Künstliche Intelligenz (see footnote 1);
2. It is quite predictable that, precisely because of their Arroganz or their lack of Natürliche Intelligenz, our Führer(s) will strongly object and will strenuously attempt to defeat the idea⁴;
3. However, in a Demokratie it is not for the Führer to decide, but for the *Volk*⁵.

² From the verb "führen" to guide, to lead. Führer is invariable.

³ German for Natural Intelligence

⁴ They have already started, by the way

⁵ Pronounced "F-o-l-k".
