- A. No matter how foolishly, dishonestly, callously, egoistically, greedily, indifferently and sometime altogether viciously our brethren actually behave;
- B. They will pretend before not only others but also themselves that
- C. They are models of wisdom, honesty, empathy, altruism, generosity, concern, and altogether virtue.
- D. However, while they manage to convince others occasionally, and for their own use fabricate all sorts of self-serving rationalization, there may subsist inside themselves some doubt about their own sanctity, however deeply they attempt to hide their own mischief from their own eyes since
- E. Few feelings are more uncomfortable than a bad conscience.
- F. Therefore the never ending quest for the reconciliation of malice and bad conscience,
- G. Which explains the success of the various declensions of psychoanalysis.
